Casting aside the accepted and time worn bonds of dogma, a Superman among Poets arises, both fruitful and fecund, endowed with a broad conception of humanity, a counsellor to the weak, -- brandishing a shining sword against the Oppressor. As Wordsworth said AH, TWAS BLISS IN THAT DAWN TO BE ALIVE, so might we speak now. A new spirit has descended among us weary mortals, with renewed hope we again turn our faces from the shadows and listen to the music of the spheres, the delineation of the eternal verities, the hope brought to us from some unknown world. No pagan creed besmirches his pages, -- no servile and shameful pandering to any narrow ways of thought. No! With letters as writ in fire, --with phrases as chiselled from chaste marble, he brings us face to face with...
