Excerpt: . . . currently performed by RNs on inpatient units. For example, VAs PCS does not account for certain recent RN tasks - such as the administration of certain intravenous medications or monitoring of a patients abnormal heart activity - that were once limited largely to intensive care units that cater to sicker patients but are now performed on other inpatient units. Nursing officials we interviewed at VAMCs we visited and officials with VAs ONS reported that VAs PCS does not accurately capture the actual acuity level of patients on inpatient units According to VAMC nursing officials we interviewed, nursing staff at VAMCs are required to classify patients by acuity level on a daily basis using VAs PCS. However, nursing officials reported that classifying patients by acuity level using the PCS is not a productive use of their time because the information...
